This leaflet can be read with support to help you understand our services

This booklet tells you about tablets to help with dementia.

Dementia is an illness that makes it hard to remember things.

It can make it hard to do the things that you enjoy.

The tablets are called:

Donepezil
Rivastigmine
Galantamine
Memantine

The tablets are not a cure but might make you feel better.

The tablets work on the brain.

They help you remember things and do the things you enjoy.

Before you start the tablets you may have:

- blood tests

- a chest x-ray

- a scan to see inside your body.

We may also record your brain activity by placing small sensors on your scalp. This is called an EEG.

The tablets sometimes make you feel:

- sick
- dizzy
- tired
- not hungry.

They sometimes give you a headache or a tummy ache.

Questions to ask your doctor

- how will the tablets help me?
- how long will it take before I feel better?
- what do I do if I forget a tablet?
- what should I do if the tablets make me feel poorly?
- what could happen if the tablets are stopped?

You could think of some questions of your own.
